

A large question mark is formed by a strip of architectural blueprints, which is curled into the shape of the question mark. The blueprints feature various technical drawings, including grids, circles, and lines. The entire scene is set against a background of a larger architectural blueprint with a grid pattern.

WHAT IS “GENDER EQUALITY”?

THE NEW LEGISLATION

THE NEW GENDER EQUALITY LAW

ABOUT US

Women's Design Service is the only UK organisation working specifically on gender and built environment issues. We have been carrying out research, producing guidelines and organising training and conferences since 1987. We aim to ensure that the design and use of the built environment reflects the needs and aspirations of women.

ABOUT THE NEW LEGISLATION

The Public Sector Duty on Gender Equality make it incumbent as well as private and voluntary bodies acting on public matters, to abide by the legislation.

So, what does "Gender Equality" mean for built environment professionals?

ABOUT THE TRAINING

Women's Design Service is offering CPD accredited training to architects, designers, planners, engineers and surveyors to raise awareness of the issues that will need to be addressed under the new legislation.

During the day's training participants will learn why gender matters for the built environment, what the requirements of the legislation will be and what changes they can make in their practice to promote gender equality.

COSTS

The cost is £575 per head for courses based at Tindlemanor in London EC1.

For in-house groups of up to 10 participants, we can come to you for a greatly reduced fee of £2,500.

CONTACT US

If you need more information or would like to discuss your requirements, please email us at wdavis@wds.org.uk or telephone 020 7490 5210.

BOOKING

You can book directly via our website – www.wds.org.uk or download the booking form and post it with your payment to Gender Equality Training, Women's Design Service, 52-54 Featherstone Street, London EC1Y 8RT.

We look forward to hearing from you.

